

In April 2007, my class went to Sea World in Orlando, Florida. We boarded the bus at 9:00 a.m. We were at Sea World by 10:45 a.m. The first thing we did was wait while our teacher went to the ticket booth. She came back with the tickets for our class, and then we were inside the park.

In my group were my friends Matthew and Patrick. The first thing they wanted to do was go to the Shamu show, but instead we got on the line for Kraken. Kraken is the tallest, fastest, and the only floorless roller coaster in all of Orlando. You spiral around and endure all these steep drops. It is kind of a scary ride.

We then went to the Shamu show, anyway. Shamu is a killer whale that does all these flips and turns with a trainer. If you sit in the front, you get very, very wet. We sat in the third row and still got very, very wet. I don't think Patrick's mom was too happy, to be honest.

We then headed through the park and went to all kinds of animal exhibits. Like Wild Arctic. I saw a beluga whale and Matthew took a picture of me putting my hands up to the glass like I was touching it. We then saw two polar bears. But then Shark Encounter was even cooler because the glass goes over your head and to the sides. It is an underwater viewing tunnel. Then the penguin exhibit was neat, too. We watched them and laughed.

Lunch was really good. We went to a buffet with chicken, mashed potatoes, vegetables, rolls, and strawberry shortcake for dessert.

Then came Journey to Atlantis, the water ride.

We were there until about 8:00 that evening. It was like the longest field trip ever, but it was fun. I hope we have the chance to go to Sea World again.
